

Leadership Styles

Leadership is the interpersonal process that involves influencing and motivating team members to achieve their goals. Numerous studies show that when nurses have proper leadership, medical organizations present improvements in patient satisfaction and better patient safety outcomes. Some leadership styles include; authoritarian, democratic, laissez-faire, situational, bureaucratic, transformational, transactional, and servant leadership. Currently, it is said that transformational leadership has been the most effective for nurse leaders. Nurse leaders can more effectively coordinate health programs, and administrative activities within their organizations by integrating different leadership approaches.

Laissez-faire leadership exemplifies a passive or inactive style of approach. Decisions and actions are left to the group, and the leader provides very little guidance or support.

Situational Leadership

The Situation being Flexible

Situational leadership is a flexible type of leadership according to the needs of the group and goals to be achieved. This can be a combination of approaches based on the situation and circumstances.

Bureaucratic Leadership

A bureaucratic leadership style is one in which the leader relies on the policies and procedures of the organization for decision-making and upholding the rules. This style of leadership is less flexible and more fixed.

Transformational Leadership

Transformer Forming a Big Picture

Transformational Leadership is a style that is focused on the big picture. This approach is focused on building relationships, sharing a vision and mission to motivate staff, and encouraging team members, inspiring people to improve performance levels.

Transactional Leadership

Transactional leadership is an approach that motivates team members through a system of rewards and punishments to get tasks accomplished. This type of approach focuses on getting the job done without significant change.

Servant Leadership

Servant Serving the Team

A servant leadership focuses on team success through individual team members. Servant leaders motivate others by creating relationships and developing the skills of the individual members, in addition to meeting the needs of each team member to provide input in decisions.
